Thanks, John. Presumably, this is for us to use in case reporters ask, right?

Emily and Rachel, no need to enter into the list, I think.

La Plata County, Colorado issued a press release today with an update on irrigation ditches and water for livestock:

http://co.laplata.co.us/notices/2015/08/update_local_response_gold_king_mine_impact_la_plata_county

From the release: Despite the opening of the ditches, owners of livestock are cautioned against allowing livestock watering at this time. Butch Knowlton has requested additional involvement from veterinary science experts from national, state, and local levels to help address concerns that residents have expressed about their livestock. Topics to be addressed are concerns surrounding animals drinking from contaminated irrigation ditches, canals and the river.

San Juan County in New Mexico has opened a water filling station to supply water for livestock and RVs. Press release on that is available here:

They are also offering free testing of well water:

thanks,

John

Subject: Animas River, food crops

Hi, Rebecca

As I explained in my voice message, I am looking for information about the Animas River contamination and how it might relate to any crops in Colorado and northern New Mexico.

My deadline is tomorrow morning, and I'm hoping you can give me a quick reply. I don't believe any food crops have been impacted, and what grows in that region is largely hay/feed corn. If you can confirm that, it would be immensely helpful.

Thanks in advance.

Kathleen
